Dear J.M. Buckler,

Thank you for coming to our class and telling us about your book! It's always nice to know that there are women out there being their own boss and being plain-out awesome.

Three of my favorite things you told us were about the cover art (what a small world!) and how you publish your own books. Another thing I liked was how you put your life experiences in your books.

Also, I know how many girls and women are body shamed, bullied verbally, and bullied for their style because of stereotypes and people being flat-out mean. It's nice to know that you can relate and make girls stronger. Especially by making girls know they're not alone. Best of luck with your future books!

Sincerely,

Brooklyn Collinsworth

Dear Mrs Buckler,

Thank you so much. You are such an amazing author and a fantastic person. You taught me so many amazing things in just an hour. You taught me so much more than just about writing and books. I learned about life, bullies, and tough times. I love how you write about your own life experiences and things that happen to you. I think that is a great way to have people relate to your books. When Mrs. Roppolo told us we were going to have an author come speak to us, I just thought we're going to get lectured about writing for an hour, but that was so not the case. I had so much fun with you and I hope you will come back again and visit. Thanks so much for the time and energy you brought to our class.

Never give up.
